POETRY.

From the Savannah Georgian. THE SPRING. "Oh, the Spring, the bountiful Spring, It shineth, and smileth, on every thing."

I love not Spring—I cannot bear
This kind of fickle woman weather,
This mingling up of smile and tear,
And "ne'er the same an hour together;"
One moment and its sunny ray,
Is shining bright as hope before 10th,
The next, and ere you cross the way,
"The raining like the devil ever you." 'Tis raining like the devil o'er you.

I love not Spring-Its blooming flowers Are very well for poet's verses,—
But he that feels its "sunny showers,"
La apt, in prose, to vent his curses, I
Give me that season of the year,
When nature more sedate reposes,—
Can man life's ills more calmly bear,
Because they're fell among the property.

Because they're felt amongst the roses ." I love not Spring-tho' with it come The Swallows from their station, And then is heard the ceaseless hum,

Of all the insect generation;
I'd rather have a cheering fire,
A bottle of old wine before me,
Such "Swallows" I much more admire,
Than those, which now are flying o'er me.

I love not Spring,—you search in vain,
The market thro' to find a dinner,
And scarce are able to obtain
Enough to feed a "young beginner;"
Let mauldin misses long to see
The charms of this "delightful season,"
Such charms I must confess, to me
Are surely any thing but pteasing.

BOUQUETS AND PORTE-BOUQUETS.

Every season brings with it some novelty of fashion, usually imported from that fatherland of fancy and frivolity, the French metropolis. This year, it seems, the whim of carrying in the hand, at evening parties, a bouquet of exotics fancifully arranged, has given rise to the invention of an ornament called a porte-bouquet ; consisting of a small stick of carved ivory, sandal-wood, or jewelry, hollow at one end, with folding leaves to receive the stalks of a nosegay, and of all varieties of price and value, from ten shillings to twice as many guineas. Without one of these bouquet-holders, (in addition to her old fashioned fan of painted vellum) no fashionable belle will appear in a Parisian ball-room; and to such a pitch has the mania for elegant bouquets of natural flowers arisen in Paris, that the trade of bouquets of natural flowers arisen in Paris, that the trade of bouquets adopted by the wives of several eminent coeffeurs. It has even been introduced into London; and Madame Nardin we hear is already (Contents: Art 1, The Sanuaglers, by J. S. The flowers, both the artificial and natural, likely to be most in vogue this season, are the Mimosa spirens, the single white Camelia, the Cactus, pink or crimson, and a new Mexican bell-flower, introduced into France by the Princess de Chimay. Screenfans, exquisitely painted, carved or embossed, are also much in fashions; and one of these beautiful eventailecrans was lately passed through the Custom House for Howell and James, which excited much attention, being the first introduced into this country.

CURIOUS SPEAKER'S SPEECH.

The exhaustion of the queen's exchequer obliged her to summon a parliament on the 24th of October, 1597. style. The commons elected for their Speaker, Yelverton, a The commons elected for their Speaker, Yelverton, a lawyer, who modestly requested to be excused. His request was a matter of usage and mere form; but some of his reasons were curious and novel:—"Nor from my ability," says he, "doth this your choice proceed; for well known it is to a great number in this place now assembled that my estate is nothing correspondent for the maintenance of this dignity; for my father, dying, left me a younger brother, and nothing &c to me but my bare annuity. Then, growing to man's estate, and some small practice of the law, I took a wife, by whom I have had many children, the keeping of us all being a great impoverishment to my estate, and the daily living of us all nothing but my daily industry. Neither from my person or nature doth this choice arise; for he that supplied this place ought to be a man CENUINE ARROW ROOT-Pure and unadultermy body is small, myself not so well spoken, my voice low, my carriage lawyer-like, and, of the common fashion, my nature soft and bashful; my purse thin, light, and never yet plentiful." His idea of the qualification for a speaker of the house of commons, however whimsically expressed, is far from ridiculous, and may merit the notice even of a reformed parliament.-Lardner's Cabinet Cyclopedia: History of England.

A correspondent transmits us the following curious anecdote, furnishing another instance of the occasional confidence of animals in others which they are supposed ing. to regard generally as their natural enemies. It would to regard generally as their natural enemies. It would have been interesting to have known by what process the strange familiarity it describes was acquired. "Some Boards—Mathematical Instruments—Ink Saucers—Yian's particular to Saucers—Yian's part years since, I lived in the village of Ickleton, in Cambridgeshire. After my shooting excursions, the dogs were fed in their kennels, the food being placed in a long trough. To this duty I generally attended myself. Upon one occasion, after feeding the dogs, I looked into the kennel through a hole in the door, and was Long Wharf. somewhat astonished, not at perceiving a number of rats there, but to see them in the trough, quietly and fearlessly partaking of bread and milk with the dogs, who seemed to pay no attention to such "small deer." I doomed the rats to destruction; and the next day placed the trough in such a position that a gun pointed through the hole would rake it from one end to the other. At the usual hour the food was placed as a lure but the dogs were kept out-in vain. I could perceive the head of a sagacious old rat, peering out at more than one hole, and from under the manger, for the purpose of reconnoitring : but none descended. Hav- trade, street, ing waited half an hour to no purpose, I let in the dogs, and in a few minutes they were again feeding cheek by jowl. Had I not ascertained this, I might have supposed that altering the position of the trough, or some other trifling disarrangement of the economy of the kennel, had aroused the suspicions of the little creatures. They seemed, however to be aware that their safety was connected with the presence of the dogs."

As soon as the eggs were hatched, the stable window was left partially opened during the day, to allow free egress and ingress, but shut at night. As soon as the young birds were able to hop out of their nest, the old ones enticed them away into the adjoining garden,—took their station in a thick shrab, and there fed them until they were able to seek their own living.

ESSRS. EDITORS—Having noticed in the Independent Chronicle and Boston Daily Evening Reformer a piece purporting to be a Police Report, in which my name is brought before the public as connected with that of Noah James, I beg leave to say that with those to whom Noah James is known I should not deem his assertions worth the trouble of contradiction—but as there may be some persons in the community who are not acquainted with Mr James's character, it may be necessary to say that all they have to do is to inquire of those who do know him, or to procure the Criminal Records of this Commonwealth, and I think whatever he says respecting my character will have but little influence on the public. Any further communication either public or private I shall here-fter avoid, as I have received enough of his low insolence and abuse already, and almost every one who has had any dealings with him can say the same.

N. B.—The demands he pretends to have against me he may leave with his Attorney immediately.

For the Boston Morning Post. A GOVERNMENT CURRENCY.

Mr Editor - I have read the essays upon currency in the Post, under the signature of "Equal Laws," &c., and have been much pleased with many of them. some of the writer's positions, however, I cannot concur with him. In the Post of Monday, he proposes a paper currency for the United States, to be issued by the Mint, never to exceed the specie actually in the mint. In other words, deposits of specie are to be received at the mint, and certificates of such deposits, payable on demand, and resembling bank notes, are to be issued therefor. It is not my purpose here, to dispute his positions concerning the advantages which would arise from this system, or to contest any of the arguments which he has used. I shall only speak of one or two of the dangers and disadvantages, which, it appears to me, will be inseparable from it, and on account of which I should, with my present views and opinions, be sorry to see the currency of the country placed on the footing which "Equal Laws," &c. proposes.

A paper currency from the Mint would be equivalent to a paper currency from the Treasury. The mint is completely under the control of the Government. By the Government, I mean the Congress and President of the United States. The whole of the deposits contained in the mint would be, at any time, at the disposal of the Government. In any case of necessity or emergency, these specie deposites would be paid out and the depositors and the public, holding the certificates, would be simple creditors of the Government, dependant on its future ability or pleasure. These certificates would be precisely like the "paper money" of the revolution, or the "Treasury notes" of the late There would be the same depreciations, the same losses by the holders, and bankruptcies and universal distress in trade would inevitably fol-

In a despotic government, 'or in an aristocratic government, in which those in power should so continue during life, this system would be less dangerous, because it would be more solid and permanent, the responsibility would remain in the same hands, and there would be less inducement to violate the pledge of the Government. But under a government like ours, no safe dependance could be placed on the inviolability of these specie deposits. Those in power for the moment, would raise money in the easiest possible manner in case of emergency, and leave to their successors the task of re-payment, or repairing the mischief which they had

Let us suppose that the proposed system had been in operation at the commencement of our last war. I would ask, whether the Government, under its great embarrassment at one period, when it possessed neither money nor credit, and when further supplies were absolutely indispensable, would not have made use of the deposits in the mint, and have left the holders of certificates, as it actually did the holders of treasury netes, to fund them, or to wait for payment on the pleasure of the Government? In cases of war, not only the public expenses are immensely increased, but the revenue from the usual sources is almost entirely cut off. Foreign commerce is annihilated, and the impost on foreign merchandise, our usual dependance, is reduced to al most nothing. In such cases, a government, especially a popular government like ours, would not hesitate to raise a revenue or procure loans, in so easy a manner as that of borrowing from the mint. The certificates, the great currency of the country, would no longer represent specie, and the consequences are easily an-

A gain. In this country, where our elections are so frequent, party spirit is constantly in violent operation. There are always two great political parties, one in office, and the other out of office. The object of the first is to keep in, and of the other to get in. If the Government have a contest with a foreign power, the opposition party joins the foreign power, right or wrong. A victory or an advantage gained by the enemy is matter of joy, because it is an injury to the dominant party. The practical enmity between parties is greater than between nations at war, and the love of power is stronger than the love of country. This was too plainly proved in our last war with England, and has also been sufficiently manifested, in our recent difficulties with France. The merchants and the great capitalists are also opposed to war, under any circumstances, because it is peculiarly injurious, for the time, to their private interests. They will therefore always oppose them. war, and strive to perplex their own government in its belligerent operations. The united elements of party feeling and avarice will thus , powerfully embarrass the actual government, and curtail its resources. Then comes the necessity of which I have spoken, and the consequent recurrence to the dernier resort, the specie of the mint. Besides,-the merchants, the traders, and the rich capitalists, those who are thus fighting the Government, are precisely those who would be the principal holders, either directly or indirectly, of this mint currency, and the Government might feel less scrupulous, on that account, of adopting a measure, which would operate less to the disadvantage of others than of this class. These are some of the evils, which I think might result from the system proposed. Indeed, I fear the mint currency system would be something like the mint julep system, very pleasant at first, and apparently beneficial and strengthening, but finally ruinous to the constitution.

Household Plants .- People do not always know what pleases them, or what vexes them. They often persevere in a pursuit which affords them more inconvenience than pleasure, hoping for some gratification which it will never afford them. The cultivation of green-house plants, in the majority of instances, is one of these unprofitable pursuits-unprofitable, we do not mean to their pecuniary interests, but to their comforts and their pleasure. The toil and trouble, and care and anxiety, always attending the cultivation of them, except when there is a green-room purposely provided for them, and time and money enough to devote to them, greatly counterbalance the pleasure derived from the investigate his claims on the generosity of an American sight and contemplation of their beauty.
